WRITEUP

CHALLENGE - `H an M Part 2`
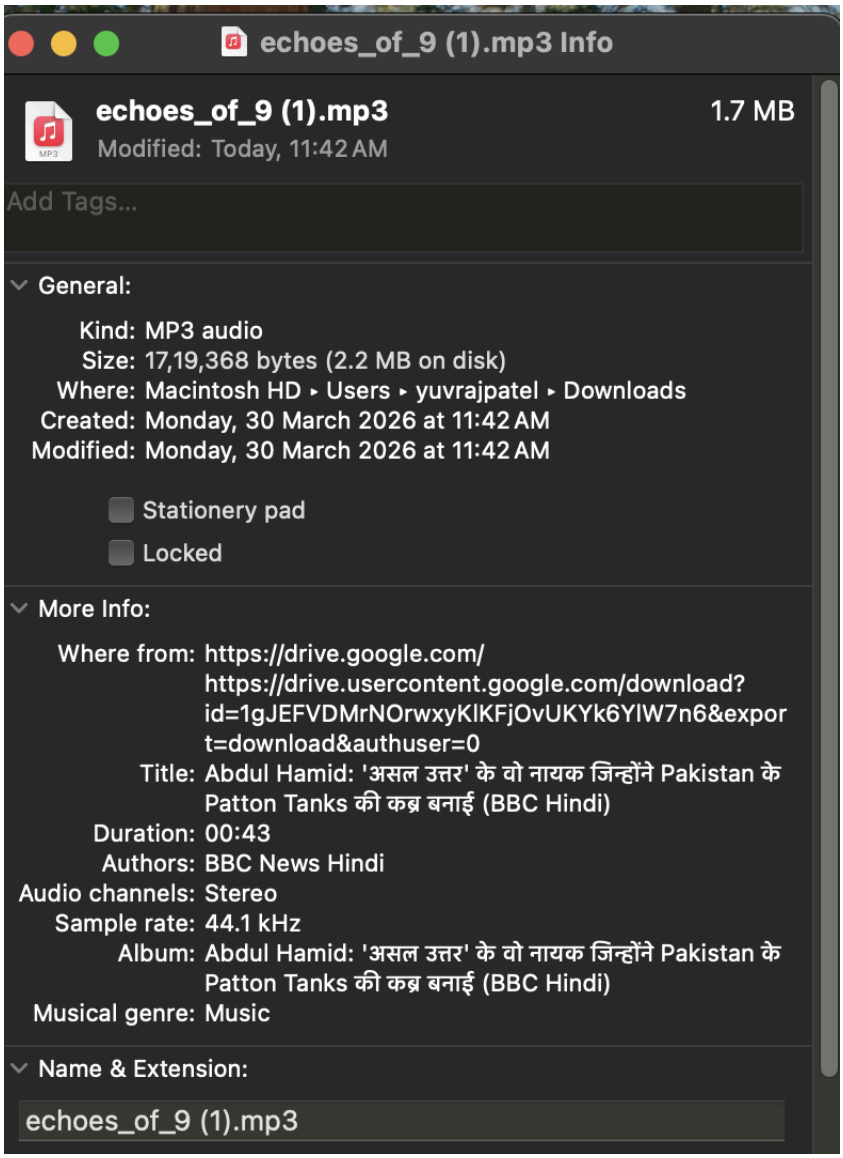
WRITEUP BY - YUVRAJ PATEL (@HunMan)

So we Given an Audio file in The Drive
So Downloaded The audio file and to check the metadata of the file



BINGO The metadata contain the full name of audio clip so searched exact Title from BBC News Hindi —(Tuffffffffff Challenge AGAIN)

Got the Exact video And Clip From Youtube AND name of the warrior salute.co.in/the-fateful-72-hours-an-account-of-the-battle-of-asal-uttar/#:~:text=Sidhu%20and%20Col%20Farhat%20Bh...

In the afternoon, one Pakistani tank had reached behind our location but was abandoned when bogged down on a bund near the water tank along the road. Shortly thereafter, we were hit by heavy machine gun fire from behind. It appeared that enemy tanks had surrounded us, but then I heard some shouting, which sounded like our own troops. I crawledforward along the grove and there met Maj. Vohra of 3 Cavalry. They had been told that our position had been overrun and had come to 'liberate' us. Luckily, no damage was done.

An eerie silence prevailed as day broke on 11 September. We were all on tenterhooks, not sure what the day would bring. I was manning the operations room when an early morning call broke the silence that prevailed. The corps commander was on line.

'Oye!' he said, in his typical accent, 'this is Corps Commander General Dhillon. Your boys have done extremely well; we are proud of you all. Call your commander. Chhetti.'

The last word was Punjabi, meaning 'quickly'. We were all justifiably proud of having broken the back of an armoured division attack. Having witnessed the war, I can but salute the leadership and courage shown by Brig. Sidhu and the grit, determination and fighting spirit of 4 Grenadiers. The enemy commanders proved rather inept, and grossly underrated Indian capability. Leaders like Brig. Sidhu and Col Farhat Bhatti, CO 4 Grenadiers and troops like CQMH Abdul Hamid showed exemplary courage against great odds, which saved our country the blushes and resulted in the destruction of a significant part of the enemy's offensive potential – a feat for which all of us who took part in the operation can feel justifiably proud of.

Here The name of Commanding Officer And regiment is mention of that fight salute.co.in/the-fateful-72-hours-an-account-of-the-battle-of-asal-uttar/#:~:text=Sidhu%20and%20Col%20Farhat%...

hari ram janu 0/0

In the afternoon, one Pakistani tank had reached behind our location but was ab bund near the water tank along the road. Shortly thereafter, we were hit by heavy machine gun fire from behind. It appeared that enemy tanks had surrounded us, but then I heard some shouting, which sounded like our own troops. I crawledforward along the grove and there met Maj. Vohra of 3 Cavalry. They had been told that our position had been overrun and had come to 'liberate' us. Luckily, no damage was done.

An eerie silence prevailed as day broke on 11 September. We were all on tenterhooks, not sure what the day would bring. I was manning the operations room when an early morning call broke the silence that prevailed. The corps commander was on line.

'Oye!' he said, in his typical accent, 'this is Corps Commander General Dhillon. Your boys have done extremely well; we are proud of you all. Call your commander. Chhetti.'

The last word was Punjabi, meaning 'quickly'. We were all justifiably proud of having broken the back of an armoured division attack. Having witnessed the war, I can but salute the leadership and courage shown by Brig. Sidhu and the grit, determination and fighting spirit of 4 Grenadiers. The enemy commanders proved rather inept, and grossly underrated Indian capability. Leaders like Brig. Sidhu and Col Farhat Bhatti, CO 4 Grenadiers and troops like CQMH Abdul Hamid showed exemplary courage against great odds, which saved our country the blushes and resulted in the destruction of a significant part of the enemy's offensive potential – a feat for which all of us who took part in the operation can feel justifiably proud of.

Lt Col Naresh K Rastogi was commissioned in the Corps of Signals in 1957. He joined the Madras Regiment in 1971, after the Army Chief asked for volunteers to join the Infantry and took part in the Bangladesh Liberation War with 8 Madras in the Jessore Khulna Sector. On leaving the Army, he moved to Nigeria, where he worked with an MNC for 12 years. He is now settled in Noida.

Here Got the age of Hari ram janu

At 3.30 am on 13 September 1965, the shelling finally stopped. A queer silence descended on the battlefield of Asal Uttar. Ceasefire had been imposed.

It is remarkable that 9 Horse, 4 Grenadiers, 3 Cavalry and 21 Rajasthan Rifles successfully held back an entire armoured division (350 tanks) of Pakistan for seventy-two hours.

For the valour the battalion displayed on the battlefield, 4 Grenadiers was awarded nine Sena Medals, two Vishisht Seva Medals (VSM) and the Battle Honour Asal Uttar.

CQMH Abdul Hamid was posthumously decorated with the Param Vir Chakra, the highest gallantry award of India.

Bit confused by awards but 4 Grenadier received 9 sena medal so enter award as sena medal and bingo

FINAL FLAG - MythX{HariRamJanu_22_4Grenadiers_FarhatBhatti_SenaMedal}